Notes of Guilford Courthouse.

The campaigns in the South in the days of the Revolution were of no less moment than those of the Jerseys, New York, and Pennsylvania. After Gates had allowed himself to be defeated at Camden, General Nathaniel Greene was placed in command of the patriot army in the South. It was in this section that defeat did as much for the cause of the colonists as victory. The battle of King's Mountain, epoch making as it was, paved the way for other reverses to the British arms. One of them, while nominally a defeat for the Americans, was the battle of Guilford Courthouse, North Carolina, one of the hardest fought contests of the whole war.

Cornwallis was hurrying after Greene across the State. He crossed the Yadkin and strained every nerve to prevent Greene from crossing the Dan. He supposed the Americans would not be able to cross at the lower ferries, but would be obliged to pass the river higher up, where it could be forded. He therefore urged his army to its utmost exertions to secure these fords before the arrivals of the Americans. Perceiving Cornwallis' error, Colonel Otho H. Williams retreated towards the upper fords, and so confounded the British commander in his delusion. Having led the British sufficiently out of the way, Williams wheeled about, and by a rapid march of forty miles in twenty-four hours, down the river, rejoined Greene, who had moved with all speed to the lower ferries, where, in anticipation of his retreat, he had collected a supply of boats. The Dan was passed on the 15th of February, and the American army was safe from its pursuers. An hour or two later, Cornwallis, who had discovered his mistake, and had marched with speed from the upper fords, appeared on the opposite bank of the river, only to see his adversary safely beyond his reach.

The river was too deep to be forded, and Greene had all the boats in his possession. Cornwallis was deeply mortified at his failure to intercept Greene. He had pursued him for over 200 miles, and had made great sacrifices to come up with him, but the American commander had managed to elude him, and had successfully carried out one of the most brilliant retreats in history. The Americans regarded their escape as providential. Their way across the Carolinas might be tracked by the blood from their feet; and, twice, when the enemy had come within gunshot of them, the rising of the waters of the Catawba and Yadkin, which they had passed in safety, had held back the British and enabled them to escape.

After resting his men for a few days on the banks of the Dan, Cornwallis fell back to Hillsborough.

Having received reinforcements, General Greene recrossed the Dan, about the last of February, and advanced into the Carolinas, to watch Cornwallis and encourage the patriots of that region. Cornwallis, being short of supplies, moved slowly southward. Greene followed him cautiously, too weak to risk a battle, but ready to take advantage of the first error on the part of his adversary. His movements were conducted with the utmost circumspection, and in order to guard against surprise he never remained in the same place more than one day and kept secret until the last moment the places he selected for his encampments. In the meantime, he was gradually receiving reinforcements, from Virginia and Maryland, until his army numbered 4,000 men.

Feeling himself strong enough to attack the enemy, Greene left his baggage at a point of safety, and advanced to Guilford Courthouse, seventeen miles distant, with the intention of bringing Cornwallis to a decisive engagement. Here he was attacked by Cornwallis, on the 15th of March, 1781, and, after one of the hardest-fought battles of the war, was compelled to retreat. Greene withdrew in good order, and Cornwallis, though victorious on the field, was so sorely crippled that he was unable to make any pursuit, and was obliged to fall back to Wilmington, near the mouth of the Cape Fear River. By the time he reached that place, his army had been so much weakened by desertions and losses in battle, that it amounted to but 1,400 men.

A Visit to the Lilliputian School.

A few days since I paid a visit to Miss Neely's Kindergarten and saw the little folks at work and play. It is really surprising the accurate knowledge contained in the small heads, and interesting to see the pretty work made by the pretty fingers. Aside from the "three R's," which they did full justice to, they answered correctly questions on natural history, botany, art and general topics with wonderful quickness. The handiwork contained specimens of weaving, stitching, modelling, drawing and coloring, forming a most attractive collection. But perhaps the most pleasing feature was to see and hear them in march and song. First the march and drill, at which each little soldier carried a flag, and perfect step was kept, and the figures made in unison to the bright music played by Mrs. Neely's skillful fingers. Lastly followed songs and games, and how heartily they were enjoyed by children as well as audience. It was with real regret that I learned the exercises were over and the Lilliputian school was "out" for the day.

Judging by the continued increase of pupils to the Kindergarten, Bolivar shows its appreciation of its educational advantages. Miss Neely has proved a most successful instructor and the children within her charge, rightly consider themselves privileged to attend her school.

A VISITOR

Night Was Her Terror.

"I would cough nearly all night long," writes Mrs. Chas. Applegate, of Alexandria, Ind., "and could hardly get any sleep. I had consumption so bad that if I walked a block I would cough frightfully and spit blood, but, when all other medicines failed, three $1.00 bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery wholly cured me and I gained 55 pounds." It's absolutely guaranteed to cure coughs, colds, lagrippe, bronchitis, and all throat and lung troubles. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at W. J. Cox's drug store.

An Inhuman Act

which caused a valuable horse much suffering, but from which permanent injury was avoided by the timely use of Mexican Mustang Liniment.

LA GRANGE, Tenn., Jan. 6, 1901.
LYON MANUFACTURING CO.,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I will say that your Mexican Mustang Liniment has done a wonderful cure in this part of the country. I own the stallion known as the "State of Tennessee," who has a large patronage both far and near—his service this Spring to date is 102 mares. I was offered $400.00 when he was two years old. I refused same. Then some one took him from the stable and commenced with a wire and wrapped the right leg from the foot up to his hip, and after standing all night the leg had swollen so large as to hide the wire, and in five days the leg burst and the flesh tured inside out. I spent large sums of money to have him cured but up to five months ago it was quite a failure, and then a friend induced me to try a bottle of your liniment. I used one of the 25-cent bottles because I did not have much faith in it, but it helped him so much that I bought a second, third and fourth bottle, which completely cured him. The reason it took so long to cure is that it had a kind of itching sensation when it was healing a little, when he would bite it with his teeth. I put the liniment on the wound with a feather and rubbed the swollen parts with my hand.

Mexican Mustang Liniment seemed to take out all the itching as well as to cause it to heal rapidly, and he showed no disposition to interfere with it. The one dollar purchase has been worth hundreds of dollars to me. I keep your Liniment in my breeding stable all the time, and to those who have horses I will say it is the best liniment that money can buy. I will answer all inquiring letters.

Very truly yours,

J. C. WALTON.
